1. SOFT SKILL DEVELOPMENT

Training in soft skills must be emphasized in dental training to make an individual a true and complete professional in his/her speciality. In dental health care settings, an individual who is trained in soft skills develop good attitude and empathy towards patients, public and fellow colleagues.

It is imperative for oneself to develop communication skills which help in mentoring the individual with subordinates. M.R. Ambedkar dental college adopts a holistic approach of learning in skills, which benefits the students in academics and clinical practice.

Acquiring soft skills makes individual a true and complete professional in his / her particular speciality. An individual who is trained in soft skills can effectively apply his technical skills with utmost confidence and efficacy. In a health care setting, with challenging situations in day-to-day life these soft skills are required to work as a team, develop good attitude and empathy towards patient, public and colleagues. All the degree programmes offered at M.R. Ambedkar dental college adopt a holistic approach wherein the learners are trained in technical skills as well as soft skills mentioned earlier, during the first year of academic course itself, during sessions moderated by trained in-house faculties and external consultants for better outcome in clinical practice.

2. Language and Communication Skill Development:

Communication is the process of sending or receiving ideas, thought and feelings through a channel i.e., verbal, or non-verbal means. An effective communication is when the receiver understands the message in same way as sender. In the medical health care setup, Communication is an integral part of a profession. Communication skills forms the basis of other soft skills and are totally integrated. All the lecture programmes offered at M.R. Ambedkar dental college adopts a holistic approach where in the learners are trained in technical skills as well as soft skills during the first year of their academic course itself, in multiple periodic sessions moderated by trained in-house faculty as well as external consultants.

4. Analytical skills Development:

Examining the problem thoroughly require attention to detail, perseverance and maintain one's focus. Analytical skills are thought processes required to evaluate information effectively. The definition of analytical thinking, as widely accepted, seems to involve ability to identify and define problems, extract key information from data and develop workable solutions for problems identified, in order to test or verify the cause of the problem as well as develop solutions to resolve the problems identified.

These strengths not only help students perform well academically, but these are exactly the skills the employer look for in a potential candidate, as they determine overall productivity and success. Analytical skills might sound a bit technical, but we all use them on a daily basis while detecting patterns, brainstorming. Observing, interpreting data, integrating new information, theorizing, and making decision based on multiple factors and options available. All these skills must be developed and kept sharp by regular practice especially in students undergoing medical curriculum.

An important aspect of teacher competence is the ability to analyse complex classroom situations, such as being able to identify a problem, figure out what caused the problem, understand student's incentives for behaving in particular ways and also to take appropriate actions following this analysis. Competent teachers seem to be able to identify, analyse and establish a problem-solving approach. We at M.R. Ambedkar dental college offer various programmes to both students as well as faculty to develop and update their analytical skills.

5. Human Value Development:

The purpose of an educational institution is not just to ensure that its students achieve soaring heights in academics but also to build up the student's character to an optimal level so that they become good citizens of this society as well as country. The foundation for this process is for the students to imbibe basic ethical, moral, and spiritual values that will help them be successful in their future endeavours. Value education must be universally applicable to all human beings irrespective of religion, nationalism, caste, creed etc. It should be based on a reason or logic not on blind beliefs. It should be naturally acceptable, valid, implementable. Therefore, it should cover all the dimensions (Thought, behaviour, and work) and levels (Individuals, family, and society) of human life and profession. At M.R. Ambedkar dental college, we conduct various programs in order to make students understand the meaning and types of human values. A large aspect of our personalities is based on our exposure to morals and ethics that define character of an individual. Hence these programs of human value development help empower and embellish the value system developed in each person

7. Employability Development:

Employability refers to the attributes of person that make him/her to gain and maintain employment. Hence there is an interest in ensuring that all associated key competencies including career advice and an understanding about world of work/employment, are embedded in education system. How to maintain employment, how to handle transition between different roles within same organisation in order to meet job requirements, how to handle transition between different jobs and ability to obtain new employment if required.

The ability of a graduate to get a satisfying job is based on not just set of skills but a range of experiences and attributes developed through higher level of learning and updating, thus making the concept of employability as not a product but process of learning. It is important that the undergraduate and postgraduate students are provided with range of opportunities to acquire these skills to help ensure a successful transition from dental school to their preferred speciality.
